IFMA holds exclusive meetings with the Russian Duma to pave the way for international standardization of Russian veterinary medicine. The discussion began with the EU director general of health and safety, who is also the president of the IFMA board of directors, who shared the history of the development of veterinary medicine and the role of the EU in the harmonization of standards in the world. “The veterinary practice in Europe is characterized by high international standards and the development of international standards and harmonization of standards in the world is a basic requirement,” wrote Günther Oettinger. Günther Oettinger The EU director general of health and safety has the opportunity to visit the Russian Federation in the coming days, which also includes a visit to the Tver veterinary college. requirement, he hopes to meet with the representatives of the Ministry of Agriculture of the Russian Federation as soon as possible. “The first important step towards the development of international standards is to meet with the ministry of agriculture and veterinarians,” wrote Oettinger. “I would like to hold an informal meeting with the minister of agriculture in the region where he lives.” Oettinger mentioned that Russian veterinary medicine is characterized by a high level of standards and is in the process of being recognized by the World Animal Health Organization. The head of the European Union has invited the Russian representative of the European Commission, Juričević, as well as the representative of Russia at the European Commission, Bresson, to the first international meeting of veterinary medicine in the Kingdom of Sweden. In addition, Oettinger invited ambassadors of the countries from which representatives of the Russian Ministry of Agriculture of veterinary medicine received their training and people with experience in the field of international veterinary medicine and veterinary science to the meeting. Oettinger is also open to other representatives of the European Parliament, the Italian Chamber of Agriculture, the Italian Medical Chamber and other European experts on veterinary medicine to the meeting, which will be held in Stockholm.
